Family Prayer

A TIE THAT BINDS

A happy and stable family provides the kind of atmosphere in which children learn to relate to others: to care, to share, to love, to forgive. It's in the home that children learn they are loved and accepted. This forms the basis of their image of themselves, their relationships with others, and with God.

Family prayer can happen in every family, despite the demands of things like homework, meetings, jobs, and athletic activities. It is a necessary ingredient in good Christian families, irrespective of whether the family is considered "traditional," is singly-parented, is interrupted (as when one parent is with the children only on weekends), or is "non-traditional" in some other way (as when the children are in the "custody" of foster parents).

Prayer-Conditioning

In today's world, it isn't easy to bring up a family within a Christian framework. The values of a consumer society are so often opposed to the values of Jesus. The hectic pace of our lives cries out for time to be together, to pray together. Families need to be "prayer-conditioned."

Prayer is not a thing we "take out" of our hearts on schedule, then tuck away for another day. Real prayer is an ongoing dialogue with our loving God. But this sort of spontaneous conversation does not come naturally to most. We all sometimes need coaching in the art of just "being with God," praying without words and listening for God with quiet minds. To practice this, include a moment of silent prayer in every family prayer plan.

As we "prayer-condition" our family, we need to help our children "connect" with God. This really isn't difficult. When we share a spontaneous prayer, such as "Thank you, God, for giving us such a nice day for our picnic," we make a quick connection with God for our children to both witness and imitate.

Opportunities to make our children more aware of God's presence can happen quite naturally. Before a big test, for example, we can invite God to study with them. As they leave the house for school, we can send them off with a blessing. At bedtime, we can ease their fears with assurances of God's constant care. Using such common everyday feelings and events, we make God present; we actually create occasions for growth of relationship with God, not only for our children, but also for ourselves.

Remember God

A story is told about a young man who went out into the desert, in search of a holy man who could teach him the secrets of prayer and holiness. Eventually, he found the old monk sitting outside his hut, and he put his question to the wise one. The holy man looked into the eyes of the eager youth, and said, "Remember God."

As with our individual prayer, and also with our ritual prayers in Church, the form our family prayer takes should vary; the focus should not. We want our children to experience the growth that comes in opening up to us, to feel the healing that comes in interaction that is built through trust, and to bask in the acceptance they receive from us. How can we believe God wants any less for us? We are all God's children, and prayer is our communication link with God.

Family prayer will not always be a "great experience." Sometimes, we won't like to pray. Often, we'd rather be doing something else at any given time. But prayer is precious, because God, who is always faithful, touches our hearts when we pray.
